Russians Get Mariner Data

(Continued from Page 1) Its photographic routine and do all it can to try to pierce through dust clouds that have frustrated geologists for a week.

Dr. Harold Masursky, a project scientist from the U.S. Geological Survey, said ground observations of the red planet indicate the globe-gliding dusty haze is slowly showing signs of clearing.

But in the meantime, controllers directed the robot spacecraft to aim its cameras toward the polar regions where partial clearings have been observed, and to try a variety of lens filters to see if they can see through the planet's veil.

Other scientists and space navigation specialists were busy planning ways to photograph Mars' two tiny moons, Deimos and Phobos, that are orbiting well above the dust haze. Mariner is expected to get a close enough look at the little moons to show surface detail.

The two television cameras aboard the 1,200-pound satellite first photographed Mars a week ago and scores of pictures received since then showed the same featureless cloud tops.

Other remote sensors aboard the spacecraft, however, were able to look through the dust and study the planet's atmosphere and surface.

Of particular interest is a hot spot detected by an infrared heat sensor on Mariner's second orbit Sunday. The instrument found an average 12-degree Fahrenheit increase above the normal minus 55 degrees over a 15-mile-wide area.

Scientists said if that heat source were confined to a small area, it would be much hotter. Further observation of such hot spots on the Martian surface would go a long way toward answering whether Mars' surface is shaped by internal activity such as volcanism or whether meteoroid bombardment and winds play the major sculpturing role.

That would help scientists answer one of the planet's big questions—is it a dead or dying body or is it active and still evolving?

Investigation Urged Into Heathrow Thefts

LONDON, Nov. 16 (AP)—Labor Member of Parliament Marcus Lipton yesterday demanded that Trade and Industry Minister John Davies investigate thefts of $5 million a year at London's Heathrow Airport.

The scandal follows a disclosure by Douglas Buchanan, retired senior security controller of the state-owned British Overseas Airways Corp., that seven men were operating the racket. Mr. Buchanan said he obtained his information in a taped interview with a paid informer who works among the looters.

Report Finds Ill Treatment Of Detainees

But British Deny Brutality in Ulster

Another part of the report cited the cases of five men who alleged that they were forced to carry out a series of prolonged, physically taxing exercises. The detainees said they were kicked, punched and struck with batons if they failed to carry out the exercises.

The commission, in rejecting the brutality allegations, said that the physical activity "must have caused hardship but... we prefer to take the view that the exercises were devised to counteract the cold and stiffness of which the arrested persons complained."

"We think there was lack of judgment there, but not cruelty or brutality," the commission stated.

The report added: "We consider that brutality is an inhuman or savage form of cruelty and that cruelty implies a disposition to inflict suffering coupled with indifference to, or pleasure in, the victim's pain. We do not think it happened here."

Northern Ireland's Protestant-dominated government, with the support of Britain, imposed the controversial internment policy on Aug. 9 to root out terrorists and gunmen in the six counties of Ulster. The policy spurred a wave of rioting, arson and killings in Ulster and thrust the province into the most severe crisis of its 50-year history.

A total of 980 men were seized under the internment policy between Aug. 9 and Nov. 10. More than half—508 men—have been released. The British government said that 472 men are now being held, some of them awaiting a decision on whether to release them.

The Commission inquiry was set up on Aug. 31 by the British government to investigate allegations of brutality by prisoners who said that soldiers beat them, made them run across ground littered with broken glass and bricks and subjected them to severe physical and psychological abuse to make them talk.

Heath on Unification LONDON, Nov. 16 (Reuters)—Prime Minister Edward Heath said last night that he believed no future British government would oppose the unification of Ireland if a majority in the North wanted it.

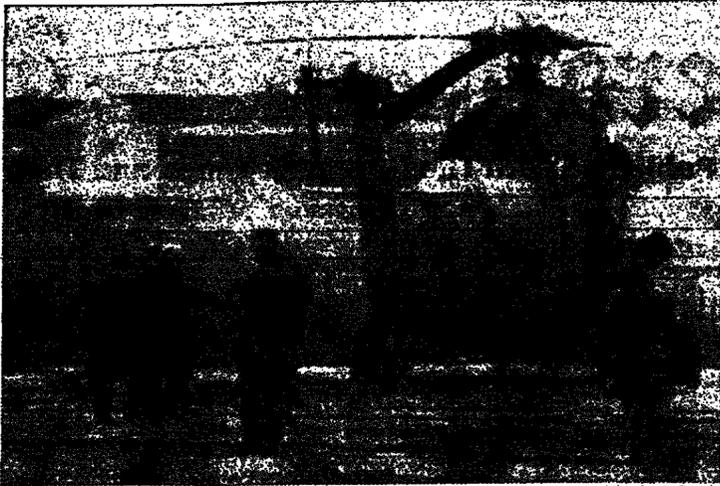

But he warned that his present government would not tolerate attempts to destroy by violence the fabric of society in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Heath, who was speaking at a banquet for London's new lord mayor, said the two communities must put aside their differences over their ultimate aims and work together to bring back peace and prosperity to Northern Ireland.

The prime minister emphasized that the reality of Northern Ireland being a part of the United Kingdom and the fact that the majority of its people wanted it to remain so must be faced when it comes to working out a political solution to the troubles.

Prosecutor Hints 'Cover-Ups' Made by French in Drug Case

One letter was addressed to a French examining magistrate, Gabriel Rousset, the other to Mr. Fournier of the French criminal police. They had a common central concern: that Delouette's testimony before the grand jury not be used to incriminate him in France.

The letters told of a meeting Mr. Stern had in Washington Sept. 14 with officials of the Bureau of Narcotics and of the French police.

The French officials—on the basis of a four-day inquiry—indicated their belief that Delouette was lying. Mr. Stern told Mr. Fournier the prosecutor then proposed the polygraph test. He agreed that if Delouette refused to take it, or failed it, he would seek a 20-year sentence.

The French, he said, agreed to prosecute Mr. Fournier if Delouette took and passed the test. "The results of the test were positive, indicating that Delouette was telling the truth," Mr. Stern said.

Jet Engine Expert Quits U.K. for Russia

LONDON, Nov. 16 (Reuters)—A British jet engine expert who worked for Rolls-Royce until September, 1970, has gone to live in Russia, it was disclosed here tonight.

British officials said they understood that Harold Austin Hill, 53, who was formerly a super-intendent at the Rolls-Royce works near Bristol, had left Britain for personal reasons.

Mr. Hill and his wife are separated. They have two grown sons. Until he quit Rolls-Royce, Mr. Hill was doing precision work on turbine engines, and as an expert on fine measurement traveled to conferences abroad, including the Soviet Union. Mrs. Hill was quoted in a newspaper report tonight as saying she believed her husband was having an affair with a Russian girl.

Dutch Dedicate Huge Seawall

HELLEVOETSLUIS, the Netherlands, Nov. 16 (Reuters). Queen Juliana yesterday formally inaugurated use of the Haringvliet Dam, a seawall described as the greatest civil-engineering project ever carried out in Holland.

The 2.8-mile dam, containing 17 sluices, has been in operation for a year. Stretching across a major inlet in southwest Holland, it is part of a billion-dollar network of seven primary and secondary dams, ordered after disastrous floods in 1953 and scheduled to be completed by 1978.

U.S. Bars Further Supply Of Phantom Jets for Israel

Chasles W. Bray, a State Department spokesman, acknowledged yesterday that the continuing review of the arms balance had reached a "punchline mark of sorts" based on information available as of Nov. 1.

He added, however, that the United States "will go on watching the situation very closely and will do so particularly in the light" of the Moscow communiqué.

With respect to additional aircraft to Israel, he will be keeping that under continuing review and will advise the State Department accordingly.

Since Israel has taken the line that no Phantom means no negotiations, the U.S. decision appears to leave in doubt the future of talks about an interim arrangement to reopen the Suez Canal. This could mean that the focus of Middle East diplomacy may shift from U.S. efforts back to the United Nations.

The U.S. decision to send no more Phantoms for now is seen, at least in part, as an effort to urge further talks on the Russians. But it is also possible that Washington is attempting to read the best intentions into what Secretary of State William F. Rogers described this weekend as "some restraint" by Moscow.

Mr. Rogers said, however, that he was not prepared to assume that the Russians are holding down on deliveries because the United States is limiting the supply of the jets. He said that the United States had not sought any direct explanation from the Russians about why shipments were down and that none had been offered.

The Israelis were understood to see the slightly diminished flow of arms as either a normal cyclical thing or as a Soviet response to Egypt's support of anti-Communist moves in the Sudan. In any case, the Israeli ambassador to the United States, Yitzhak Rabin, said yesterday that "we do not accept this evaluation" that the balance has not shifted.

Authoritative sources, meanwhile, said that Mr. Rogers told Israeli Foreign Minister Abba Eban on Oct. 14 that the pipeline for the Phantoms, which have become a symbol of the U.S.-Israeli military supply relationship, would remain closed for the time being.

Moments after he told Mr. Eban that there would be no resumption of deliveries, which stopped last July, Mr. Rogers told reporters that the United States would "carefully reconsider" its military commitments to Israel as a result of the Soviet-Egyptian communiqué. That statement did nothing to

Egypt May Reconsider Its Policy

Aide Says Sadat's Ultimatum Didn't Mean He'd Go to War

CAIRO, Nov. 16 (UPI)—Vice President Husaini Shafiq has spelled out the details of an Egyptian ultimatum that the Middle East crisis must be settled in the next seven weeks.

"What this means is bringing political maneuvers to a halt, but it does not necessarily mean initiation of fighting immediately," President Anwar Sadat's deputy said yesterday.

"It means drawing up a new course for liberation, fulfillment of mobilization along this course, and reconsideration of every aspect of our life."

Mr. Shafiq made his statement in an interview with the weekly magazine Rose el-Yousef.

President Sadat has said the conflict must be settled by the end of the year by war or peace, without details.

A Desperate Country Mr. Shafiq said: "After this year, we shall become a country desperate in regaining its rights and liberating its territory."

"Being desperate involves a certain degree of adventure, but this will be calculated internationally, locally and at the Arab level."

He said Egypt would lose nothing in any decision it might take next year, including war.

"Our land is occupied, our canal is closed, and Israel cannot harm us more than it already has," he said. "As to world peace, we are not expected to protect it at the expense of our own safety."

Rogers Seen Retracting The semi-official newspaper Al-Ahram said Israeli Premier Golda Meir forced U.S. Secretary of State William F. Rogers to withdraw a statement that the U.S. was up to reach an interim peace agreement between the two countries.

"There is no hope in what America is now doing in the area," a newspaper editorial said. "Recent statements by

Israel Dismisses Fact

JERUSALEM, Nov. 16 (UPI)—Israel expressed strong faction today with the U.S. stance.

"The Israeli stance is before Nov. 1 and after the adherence to the principle of balance of forces obliges neutral of the plane supply," Israeli officials said.

"The situation today," is that Egypt has undertaken (from the United States) to supply all equipment it needs, while continuing supply of arms and undertaking (to the United States) to supply.

"This is lack of balance."

Soviet Master Spy Rudolf Abel Dies

MOSCOW, Nov. 16 (Reuters).—Col. Rudolf Abel, 68, the man said to have masterminded Russia's spy network in the United States for nine years, died here yesterday, sources said today.

They said Col. Abel had been suffering from lung cancer for six months and died in a Moscow hospital run by the KGB (state security committee).

The Soviet news agency, Tass, confirmed Col. Abel's death later, calling him "the famous Soviet intelligence man" who held the Order of Lenin and six other Communist awards. It said Col. Abel's obituary was published in the army newspaper Krasnaya Zvezda.

Col. Abel was arrested in New York in 1957 and sentenced to 30 years' imprisonment, but he served only four years and eight months of his term before being exchanged in 1962 for U-2 pilot Francis Gary Powers.

It was not until three years later that Col. Abel's spy role was acknowledged by the Russians and the head of the KGB paid tribute to the work of "the agent known under the name of Rudolf Abel."

Col. Abel rarely emerged into the limelight after his return home, where he continued to work in intelligence. He was built up in the press here as a model for Soviet youth.

But he said once in a magazine interview that he disliked most Soviet spy books because the agents in them "are always made into sort of supermen."

One of his rare appearances after his return was at one of the strangest reunions held in recent times. He and other former Soviet spies gathered in a bleak East Berlin street to honor the memory of Richard Sorge, a Soviet master spy, who was arrested in Tokyo in 1941 and executed three years later.

Col. Abel and other surviving former Soviet spies stood to attention as the street was renamed Richard Sorge Street.

Col. Abel entered the United States illegally in 1948 and, for nine years until his arrest, worked quietly and unobtrusively as a photographer in Brooklyn, using the alias of "Emil R. Goldfus."

Nuclear Secrets

He controlled a network which relayed Western nuclear secrets to the Kremlin and two of whose members, Julius and Ethel Rosenberg, died in the electric chair.

Detectives who searched his apartment after he had been betrayed by his second-in-command, who defected to the United States, found microfilming equipment, a powerful shortwave radio, and such standard items of a spy's equipment as hollow cuff links and hollow pencils.

He was sentenced to 30 years' imprisonment after, according to his own later account, he had refused an American offer to join their intelligence service.

Col. Abel was awarded the Order of Lenin after his release, according to Russian sources.

Prior to his spy work in the United States, Col. Abel had warned Moscow in advance of Hitler's "Operation Barbarossa"—the sudden attack on Russia in 1941.

Later, he supplied valuable information on the German war effort, and after the war went to the West to track down Nazi war criminals.

Col. Abel revealed in a 1968 interview that while in jail he had painted a portrait of the late President John F. Kennedy and presented it to his late brother, Robert.

Col. Abel said the portrait greatly pleased the then attorney general and "as a result of my gift, the prison administration no longer did anything to hinder my artistic diversions but even encouraged them in every way giving me paints, paper, and other necessary things."

Col. Abel leaves a wife and a daughter. The sources said he would be buried Thursday but did not say where.

Stanley-Livingstone (Discont'c)

The Long Ordeal for Stanley Finally Comes to an End

By Henry M. Stanley
Of the New York Herald
UNYANYEMBE (TABORA) TO UJJI, June-November, 1871—

[Stanley has overstayed his leave in Tabora, a crossroads of the east-west and north-south trade routes, by three months. Ill again with a near-fatal case of malaria, he has been suckered by the Arab traders of the region into contributing the vaunted five-power of his Expedition to the battle with Mbitwa, a legendary African chieftain now immortalized in Tanzania as one of its first and most effective resistance fighters. Mbitwa has conquered most of the land between Unyanyembe and Ujji—forcing Stanley to detour far south of his projected route to Ujji—and has decimated the explorer-journalist's ranks, obliging him to recruit an entire new party.]

The effect of this defeat is indescribable. It was impossible to sleep, from the shrieks of the women whose husbands had fallen. All night they howled their lamentations. Fugitives were continually coming in through the night, but none of the men who were reported to be dead were ever heard of again. I am quite disappointed and almost disheartened. But I have one consolation, I have done my duty by the Arabs, a duty I thought I owed to the kindness they received me with.

I am going to try another route. The southern route seems the most practicable one, though very few people know anything of the country south. But before I can venture to try the route I have to employ a new set of men. My position is most serious. I have a good excuse for returning to the coast, but my conscience will not permit me to do so, after so much money has been expended, and so much confidence has been placed in me. In fact, I feel I must die sooner than return. If Livingstone is at Ujji, he is now locked up with small means of escape.

Illness, Then Death

[Shaw falls ill before leaving Unyanyembe.] "Forget your miserable infirmities," said I. "Leave off this pantomime. You are not sick, dear fellow; it is only your nerves." Before we had gone 500 yards the wild monkey, probed behind by Sly Mabrubi, lifted up his heels, and John Shaw, never a very good rider, measured his length upon the ground near a thornbush. Shaw screamed, and we all ran up to assist him.

"Oh dear, oh dear. Let me go back, please, Mr. Stanley."

"Why? Because you had a fall from a donkey? Come, pluck up courage, man. I should be sorry to say you backed out."

We assisted him once more; but I was all the time wondering, nevertheless, if it were not better to send him back. What if he died on the road! Perhaps he really is sick! No, he is not—he is only pretending! Shaw is eventually sent back to Kwhihari, where he expires shortly thereafter.

When we were about commencing the march the next morning, it was discovered that two more had deserted. In the evening the incorrigible deserters were brought back, and were well flogged and chained, to ensure their against further temptation.

We had barely left the waving cordillera before we came in sight of a herd of noble stags; two hours afterwards we had entered a grand and noble expanse of park land, whose glorious magnificence and vastness of prospect was certainly one of the finest scenes to be seen in Africa.

A Paradise

Here at last was the hunter's Paradise! Did I not well remember my first blunder experience in African jungles when in the maritime region! But this—where is the nobleman's park that can match this scene? Here is a soft velvet expanse of young grass, graced by the under trees spreading in clumps, herds of large and varied game browsing within easy rifle range.

Surely I must feel amply compensated now for the long southern detour I have made. No thorny jungles and rank-smelling swamps are here to daunt the hunter, and to sicken his aspirations after true sport! No hunter could aspire after nobler field to display his prowess.

Within the high inclosure of bush and thorn, all was jollity, laughter, and radiant, genial comfort. Around every camp-fire dark forms of men were seen squatting; one gazed at a hussid bone; another turned the stick, polished with huge hawks to the bright blaze; another sucked the rich marrow in a sear's leg-bone; there were others busy stirring industriously great black pots of ugali, while the fire-light cast a bright glow over the naked forms of the men, and gave a crimson tinge to the tall tents that rose in the centre of the camp, like a temple sacred to some mysterious god. The green hills are crowded by clusters of straw-thatched cones. The hills rise and fall; here denuded and cultivated, there in pasture, here timbered, yonder swarming with huts. The country has somewhat the aspect of Maryland.

We push on rapidly, the news of our coming being in sight and are ready in We halt at a little beyond the slope of a ridge. The port of Ujji, us embowered in the hills. As I had the morning arrived!

...And for Roraback and (Sigh) the Rea

UNYANYEMBE (TABORA) TO UJJI, November, 1871— Stanley having dogged it for three months in Unyanyembe, I feel a 24-hour respite for the Second Herald Expedition will not be remis.

For one thing, a decision must be made on whether to glue together the nerve ends of Unyanyembe, our Land Rover, for one last effort, or to pack the vehicle in formaldehyde and sell it to Harvard. For another, the wide-open rail junction of what is now Tabora is rumored by hosts of ex-GIs (Gastro-Intestinals) to be a swinging centre of Rest & Recreation featuring among its havens of hedonism a restoration in suburban Kwhihara of the house where Stanley dwelled.

As usual, the explorer is short-changed by the local curators. Historically, the thick-walled red-clay compound surrounding the courtyard was Stanley's house, constructed expressly for the use of him-and-his-Expedition. A large plaque beside the exquisite carved wooden front door, however, proclaims: "On this site resided DAVID LIVINGSTONE after he had met H.M. STANLEY at Ujji on Nov. 10, 1871. He (Livingstone) left this spot on Aug. 25, 1872, to undertake what was to be his last journey in Africa." The legend continues inside: "This building is maintained by the Department of Antiquities... to commemorate Dr. Livingstone's association with Kwhihara."

In Stanley's repeat, Stanley's former store-room are preserved such memorabilia as a lethal-looking knobkerrie (Dr. Livingstone, I presume), a splinter from the original mango tree under which the two first met (the multiplicity of similar souvenirs hawked throughout Tanzania indicate that this celebrated sapling stood at least as high as the True Cross), and a series of framed photographs of hundred-year-old front pages of the New York Herald.

"LIVINGSTONE SAFE," headlines the first copy, "Grand Triumph of American Enterprise," over the following dispatch: "London, May 1, 1872—News has been received in the city from Bombay that Livingstone, the African explorer, is safe with Stanley, the chief of the Herald Corps of Search, at Zanzibar. The timeliness and accuracy of Herald reportage, I note with satisfaction, has changed little over the past century.

Enthralled, I linger over the jabs dippers of a gentler era: "A band of Indians seize a mule train in San Antonio and burn it all the people accompanying it." "Yesterday afternoon, Mary McCann, aged 81, was found in the hallway of 136 West Street suffering from a dose of Paris Green." "THE MIDNIGHT SHRIEKS proceeding from tenement houses are often caused by the vigorous blows of husbands and wives in pursuit of beddings, and fierce quarrels sometimes ensue. Put down these sources of discord with KNOWLES INSECT DESTROYER, Depot No. 7, Sixth Avenue."

Abroply, I am yanked back to the present by Lyn's stated intention to leave the Expedition, on the grounds of inettile fatigue, and to proceed direct to Ujji by night train. I insist that as a symbolic gesture we shake hands over the nearby grave of the unfortunate Shaw, who perished of an unmentionable malady shortly after deserting the Stanley party.

A Poignant Question

Lyn, understandably, prefers his own interpretation of the separation, and we stroll up the wooded glade to the spot where Stanley took his final leave of Livingstone.

En route, we are joined by an African schoolteacher pushing his bicycle home who is anxious to practice his English.

I explain, not without pride, that I represent the New York Herald. A cog turns, then slips. "Turning to our guide, the teacher points to the anemic facsimile of the indomitable explorer and asks in Swahili, 'Is that really Stanley?'"

"Don't be silly," says the guide. "Stanley is dead."

"I know, I know!" says the teacher. "Is that Stanley?"

I sign up Gadi and Alan Venable, self-described "wandering minstrels," for the last leg of the trek, and we head south the following morning at 4 a.m.

At 5:30, I suddenly realize that I have left The New York Times's only copy of "How I Found Livingstone" back in the Tabora Hotel. I am desolate, nobody, but nobody, crosses The New York Times with the occasional exception of the Herald Tribune. Hassan assures me that we will be able to telephone from Mpenda, 50 miles down the trail.

The larger game has fled in terror at the maniacal ululation of the approaching Uhuru, though there is ample and pungent evidence along the track of their recent departure. Even so, the gallees, banders, mongees, giraffes, elands and what Hassan calls "waterbogs" sited, scurrying to safety hint at the continuing abundance of wildlife along the route described by Stanley.

Dik-Dik, Too

Without warning, the usually solemn Hassan turns mark. The best driver I have ever known, his performance is now neutralized by an atavistic urge to bag a dik-dik for his brother in Ujji. Eyes bulging, screaming imprecations, he pursues the cocker-spaniel-sized antelope cross-country with wild abandon, strewn odd hinds of Land Rover across the forest pavement.

As we set off in the pursuit of a much larger critter, what is left of Alan in the back seat shouts: "For God's sake, man, what are you chasing now?"

"Dik-dik," replies Hassan.

"That's no dik-dik," hollers Alan. "It's much too big to be a dik-dik."

"No matter, bwana," roars Hassan, adding the gas. "So it's a dik-dik."

As it turns out, there are no telephones in Mpenda. However, Hassan's ever resourceful drive to the district police headquarters, still counts on the other shrines to follow suit.

Joachim von Frankenberg, Lufthansa's commercial director, said the ILO excursion fare between New York and German cities will take effect Feb. 1 unless firm agreement is reached by the other members of the International Air Transport Association, meeting here.

He said, "We hope we can get them to see it our way. We know we have support. There will be no compromise."

Lufthansa's move to lower fares has so far been followed by Alitalia and the Scandinavian Air System.

(Failure to reach agreement could lead to untold confusion for travelers and economic disaster for some airlines, the opening session, United Press International reported. Floyd D. Hall, is also president of Eastern Air Lines.)

Where an impatient, uncommonly courteous volunteer to assist the Hotel of the crucial hour of the missing book. To say, the book arrived final destination the following morning.

While filling in the patient on the details of the trophy, I marvel at the notion of American subculture, the most remote corner globe. On the wall of the room is a bulletin board "POLICE SUPERVISOR MPANDA." These notices, visuals are nearly classified three categories: to "kill," "in view," and "sight."

Shattered Illusions

I think the sergeant, less station and freeze! Sm from another office are African men, each with a four-inch bone protruding from his forehead. Peckholes-pockholes—visual headlines in the National Geographic: "Roraback of the Discoverer Lost Tribe in Tanzania." Heart-a-flu watch their approach. Could be, are they possibly, the survivors of a long-vanished

They are not.

Illusions shattered, I stare at the three municipal saunter past police headgear, cream-colored pencils neatly into their Afro hair.

Our next-to-last stop, Uzivina, where Hassan put a service station hardy renowned sail-works and away from Stanley's cross the croc-infested Madi River. Our exhaust pipe has mired and we are leech on close examination, the seeping from several ad-ids in the rear of the vehicle turns out to be the forerunners of a shattered fourth of honey the drive bought along the way. The family and friends back in the gunk already covered trucks, racks, spare parts, emcy rations, extra clothing, seat cover, and is beginning ooze into the differential.

Wars, and weary in our hour, we unaccountably a giggle—a phenomenon exposed. Yet another facet of character of the many-spoken Hassan. "Allah has deserted says my second-in-command. 'From here to Ujji, we stick together.'

Fifty miles from our destination, euphoria gives way to premonition. I begin to guess the possible consequences, carrying the American flag through the streets of Ujji, peculiarly without permission.

"Listen, Hassan," I say. "You know the mayor of Ujji 'Mayor?'"

"Yeah, you know. The elder, the mukhtar, the man."

Gently, Hassan explains against the Tanzania is not a colony; that the so-called "head man" has been spotted by the state, that "we are equals among equals."

We drive on in silence a few miles, the sensitive driver visibly distressed at my disappointment.

"Tell you what, bwana," he says at length. "There is no man in Ujji, like I said, you really want; I'll get brother to introduce you to chief."

Uhuru wheezes up her last and we stop to save the last into the Promised Land. View is magnificent, over a countryside oddly evocative early-autumn New England. Waterfall spills from between massive boulders, its catching the last rays of setting sun, and a warm breeze rises from the shore. Lake Tanganyika.

Of a sudden, I am grabbed beyond words that Stanley had not been sent to find Adm. Byrd.

Bonn Economics Aide Quits, Attacks Schiller's Policies

BOON, Nov. 16 (NYT)—Philip Rosenthal, a prominent industrialist turned Social Democratic politician, quit his post as state secretary in the Economics Ministry today because of what he said was foot dragging by the government on legislation increasing benefits to workers.

Mr. Rosenthal, who turned his Bavarian porcelain factory into a world-renowned concern and a model of progressive industrial relations, accompanied his resignation with a bitter public attack on Economics Minister Karl Schiller.

The 55-year-old businessman charged that his former boss was "a man attempting to transform the Social Democrats into still another party of the privileged." He also accused Mr. Schiller of bypassing him on policy decisions.

In response, Mr. Schiller said that he was "outraged" by the ways and means chosen by Mr. Rosenthal to resign. He noted that the state secretary had declined to tell him why he was quitting, preferring instead to issue a press release.

Calls on Brandt

The release came out while Mr. Rosenthal was calling on Chancellor Willy Brandt to announce his resignation. The chancellor said afterward that he regretted the "circumstances and form" of the resignation.

Government sources said that Mr. Rosenthal's anger had been rising steadily for three weeks over delays in his pet policy project: an expanded program enabling workers to acquire private capital.

But he dwelt less on this than on the Brandt government's tax reform policy, which he described as fundamentally "disadvantageous to employ" and "advantageous to the rich."

Mr. Rosenthal, who had been in office about one year, apparently timed his resignation to coincide with the convention here of the Social Democratic party. The convention, which opens in two days, is scheduled to spend much of its time on the economic issues that led to Mr. Rosenthal's action.

In a coincidental development, it was disclosed today that a group of Social Democratic party members has demanded that Mr. Rosenthal close his porcelain factory in South Africa. They claim that the black workers there are "underpaid."

Metalworkers' Strike

FRANKFURT, Nov. 16 (Reuters).—A key section of West Germany's metal industry voted unanimously today to strike at midnight Sunday.

The decision by the national executive of the Metal Workers' Union of the North Baden and North Wuertemberg region immediately affected 654,000 workers. But it was liable to affect current negotiations in other regions involving all the nation's 4.3 million metalworkers.

But he said once in a magazine interview that he disliked most Soviet spy books because the agents in them "are always made into sort of supermen."

One of his rare appearances after his return was at one of the strangest reunions held in recent times. He and other former Soviet spies gathered in a bleak East Berlin street to honor the memory of Richard Sorge, a Soviet master spy, who was arrested in Tokyo in 1941 and executed three years later.

Col. Abel and other surviving former Soviet spies stood to attention as the street was renamed Richard Sorge Street.

Col. Abel entered the United States illegally in 1948 and, for nine years until his arrest, worked quietly and unobtrusively as a photographer in Brooklyn, using the alias of "Emil R. Goldfus."

Appears at Henderson's Trial

Medina Testifies He Lied on My Lai Toll

By Douglas Robinson

PORT MEADE, Md., Nov. 16 (AP)—Ernest L. Medina, the commander of the American troops that killed South Vietnamese civilians at My Lai, admitted yesterday that he had lied to Col. Oran K. Henderson about the number of villagers killed in the combat assault.

Mr. Medina, who resigned from the Army last month three weeks after his acquittal on murder and manslaughter charges arising from the My Lai incident, also testified that he had "not been completely candid" in previous statements made under oath to Army investigators.

In a quiet voice, the former captain agreed with the military prosecutor, Maj. Carroll J. Tichenor, that because of his falsehoods, he had "completely disgraced and dishonored" the uniform he once wore.

Mr. Medina, who is now a helicopter company executive in Menominee, Mich., appeared as a defense witness at the court-martial of Col. Henderson on charges that he covered up the My Lai atrocity and that he later lied in an appearance before an Army board of inquiry.

It was the strongest testimony offered so far in the 11-week-old trial to support Col. Henderson's contention that his men lied to him about the massacre when he tried to find out what had happened on the morning of March 16, 1968.

In his testimony, Mr. Medina said that when questioned by Col. Henderson in the field two days after the assault he had told the brigade commander that 20 to 25 civilians had been inadvertently cut down by artillery, helicopter gunships and small-arms fire. At the time, he said, he had already been informed by his platoon leaders that at least 106 villagers had been killed.

"I did not tell him that I had a feeling these people had been shot by members of my command," he told a hushed courtroom. "Col. Henderson asked me whether I saw any indiscriminate wild shooting and I told him I did not."

After talking together 15 or 20 minutes, Mr. Medina testified, the colonel "put his arm around my shoulder and said, 'Ernie, is there anything else I should know?'"

Why He Lied

He spoke in a flat, unemotional voice of his reasons for both lying and for withholding information from the colonel. "I gave artillery and gunship fire as the reasons for the bodies," he said. "At the same time, not wanting to believe my people would do this, I tried to give the impression they wouldn't do this." The witness said that he personally had seen only 20 to 25 bodies in one location on a north-south trail, but that he did not tell Col. Henderson the bodies were all in one place.

Under cross-examination, Mr. Medina said that the only two questions asked him by Col. Henderson in the field dealt with possible atrocities and the shooting of a woman by a captain. The former officer, as he did at his own trial, admitted shooting a wounded woman because he thought she was about to shoot him.

He said the colonel never asked about allegations of a sergeant firing into a ditch filled with bodies or about how the 20 to 25 civilians had been killed. He also said that the interrogation in the field was the only time he had been questioned while he served in Vietnam.

Calley Trial Noted

Mr. Medina, who had previously testified at the court-martial of 1st Lt. William L. Calley Jr. that he had "suppressed" information about a civilian dead when queried by Col. Henderson, repeated yesterday the four reasons he had given then for his action.

"First, I felt it would bring disgrace to the military service; secondly, I knew it would have repercussions in villages of other nations; United States and other nations; third, I was concerned about my family and my role as a father; and lastly, I was concerned about myself," he said.

Under prodding by the prosecution, Mr. Medina said that he had not been "completely candid" in his appearance before the Army panel headed by Lt. Gen. William R. Peers that looked into cover-up charges. Nor, he went on, had he told the

No Cards Plea NEW DELHI, Nov. 16 (AP)—India's Prime Minister Indira Gandhi said today she is not interested in receiving any birthday cards this year because of the crisis with Pakistan. Only Maginot Bidder Gets Tower, Bunker for 9,100 Francs BITCHE, France, Nov. 16 (Reuters)—An auction sale in a village café here today gave a local surveyor part of the Maginot Line, the French fortifications that became one of the most famous failures in military history. He was the only bidder. Marcel Joffroy, of nearby Metz, snapped up an observation tower and bunker on the line for a mere 9,100 francs. Another bunker and five acres of land once cleared for defense against German invasion were left unsold. About 40 onlookers, including a number of Germans, crammed into the little café for the auction, but only Mr. Joffroy had given the necessary advance notice that he wanted to bid. Officials handling the auction for the Defense Ministry had been expecting much more interest in the sale. They received hundreds of requests for information from the United States, Canada and France. Auctioneer Paul Hantz refused to be downhearted. More bunkers and another observation tower will come under the hammer later this month and in December, he said.

Berlin Wall Passes Seen Held Up by Talks Slowdown

BERLIN, Nov. 16 (UPI)—Hard going in West Berlin's negotiations with East Germany on travel rights for West Berliners today diminished hopes that the Communist wall will be opened for Christmas visits.

"I do not think the negotiations will be completed by the end of the year," West Berlin negotiator Ulrich Mueller told reporters.

Mr. Mueller, leader of West Berlin's city senate, met again today in East Berlin with East German State Secretary Guenter Kohrt.

It was their 10th meeting since the American, Soviet, British and French ambassadors signed the four-power draft agreement on Berlin Sept. 3. But West German officials said their talks were making slower progress than those between West and East German officials on traffic arrangements under the four-power agreement.

Both sets of negotiations must be completed before the four-power agreement can go into effect.

Under the ambassadors' agreement, the 2 million inhabitants of West Berlin were promised travel rights equal to those of West Germans. This would include the right to visit relatives in East Berlin. No such passes have been granted since 1965.

Peking-Rwanda Ties

TOKYO, Nov. 16 (AP)—Communist China has announced it has established diplomatic relations with the African nation of Rwanda.

Hirohito Says He Is Sorry For Some Incidents in WWII

TOKYO, Nov. 16 (Reuters)—Emperor Hirohito of Japan, in the first press conference here he has given to foreign journalists, said today he was sorry for some of the things that had happened in World War II.

But in his answer to a question from a Dutch journalist he did not explain what things he was referring to. And he emphasized that his wartime role was that of a constitutional monarch acting on his government's advice.

The 70-year-old emperor, who has ruled for 45 years, seemed nervous and ill at ease at the start of his 50-minute audience for 24 correspondents.

But he freely answered questions, both those submitted in advance and others asked on the spot, about his recent seven-nation tour of Europe.

Asked about his wartime role, which prompted demonstrations against him in some European countries during his tour, notably in Britain and the Netherlands, he said: "In this country my grandfather (Emperor) Meiji established constitutional government and I have acted in compliance with the wishes of Meiji... as a constitutional monarch."

Idris Sentenced

CAIRO, Nov. 16 (Reuters)—A Libyan People's Court which has been trying 81-year-old ex-King Idris in his absence, today sentenced him to death by firing squad, the Middle East news agency reported from Tripoli. The king was ousted by a coup in September, 1969, and was last reported living in Egypt.

Bruno Cicognani, 92, Dies; Novelist And Playwright

FLORENCE, Italy, Nov. 16 (AP)—Bruno Cicognani, 92, Florentine novelist and playwright, died today at his home.

Among his best known novels are "La Vela" (The Sail), translated into French, Swedish, Hungarian, Czech and Spanish; "Villa Beatrice," translated into French, Spanish, German and Dutch, and his autobiography, "L'Eta Favolosa" (The Fabulous Age).

Mr. Cicognani's theatrical works include "Belinda e il Mostro" (Belinda and the Monster) and "Yo el Rey," Spanish for "I, the King."

His main themes were the Tuscan way of life and deeper Christian visions of life.

Dr. Nathan Edelman

NEW YORK, Nov. 16 (NYT)—Dr. Nathan Edelman, 60, a Columbia University specialist in 17th-century French literature, died Sunday.

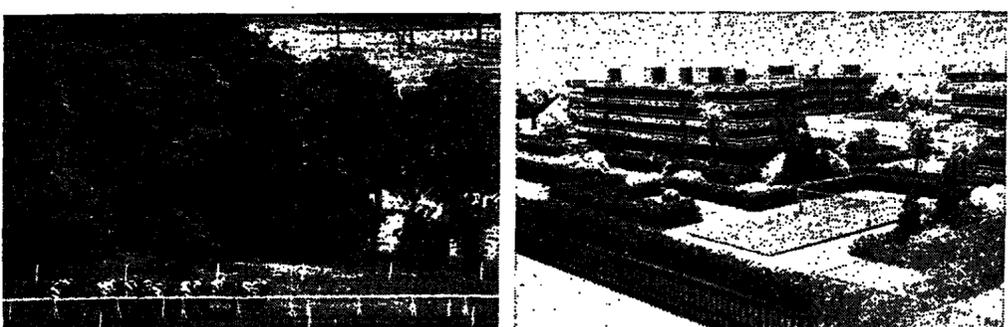

Dr. Edelman was the author of major studies in his field, including "Attitudes of 17th Century France Toward the Middle Ages." He edited Volume III of "A Critical Biography of French Literature."

Born in Paris, Dr. Edelman came here in 1922 and was naturalized a citizen in 1927.

Assailant Honored

TORONTO, Nov. 16 (AP)—Geza Matrai, 27, charged with assaulting Soviet Premier Alexei N. Kosygin here Oct. 18, has been elected secretary general of the Hungarian Freedom Fighters of Canada. It was learned yesterday. He is free on $1,000 bail.

L'ORÉE DE LONGCHAMP

Racing fans are — at the edge of Longchamp. And the Auteuil racetrack is only a few minutes away.

Facing the Bois, the buildings are only four stories high. A club for tennis and sports is planned; you walk out of your front door and — on to the court.

An ideal residential site overlooking the Bois

Facing the Bois at the Porte de Boulogne, the Orée de Longchamp enjoys a privileged location. The Champs-Elysées are very near (through the Bois), and weekends in the country are of easy access (by the Autoroute de l'Ouest). The circular boulevard soon to be completed will enable everyone to reach all of the "gates" of Paris within a few minutes. It would be unthinkable for residents of Montparnasse, or even the avenue Montaigne to leave their homes dressed in shorts and run around the block at a fast trot. At the Orée de Longchamp, this is quite usual even recommended. Tennis, bicycling, horseback riding, sailing, water skiing or rowing on the Seine, the Molitor swimming pool and Roland Garros stadium near by: all of these sports are at the door of the Orée de Longchamp. The small modern buildings nestling in the green landscape are only four stories high. Their entrance halls, faithful to the over-all image, are designed and decorated with care. Everywhere large terraces balconies overlook the Bois or the gardens, and each ground-floor apartment has its own private large garden. However, only a small number of apartments are available at the Orée de Longchamp, and their price is so reasonable that a quick decision is a must for those who wish to enjoy the daily pleasure of living there.

Power by Fission

The debut of the People's Republic of China in the United Nations was a very considerable event, both for the fact itself and for the initial speech of Chiao Kuan-hua. That the United States was the villain of the piece—by name, at least—was to be expected, even with Mr. Nixon's visit to Peking impending. Rather more important, however, was Mr. Chiao's reiteration of the Chinese position on the "super-powers."

"China is still an economically backward country as well as a developing country," said Mr. Chiao. "Like the overwhelming majority of the Asian, African and Latin-American countries, China belongs to the Third World." In other words, Peking is not asserting itself as a power, despite its huge size; it is just another developing country, fighting exploitation and domination. It gives support to the rest of the Third World, but that support is "mainly political and moral." It endorses the rights of the "medium and small countries" to "settle their own affairs as independent and sovereign states" and to "equal status in international relations."

This stance, obviously, will have an enormous attraction for the Third World. Modest in the assertion of China's own power, vigorous in backing the "petroleum-exporting" countries, the Latin-American claims to a 200-mile territorial sea, the Palestinians and all peoples engaged in "just struggles," Mr. Chiao stated a formula that will help mobilize all the smaller and underdeveloped nations around a Chinese nucleus in the UN.

To be sure, there are some logical problems in the Chinese position. Suppose Japan, which is at least as dependent on fisheries as any Latin-American state, were to claim a 200-mile sea territory? Is Taiwan—quite apart from the activities of the "Chiang Kai-shek clique"—entitled to as much consideration as the Palestinians? What of the people of Tibet? Or of Bangla Desh? Is a popular struggle "just" only in the eye of the beholder?

And there is another difficulty posed by the Chinese statement. If all countries in the UN are really equal, if the organization escapes fully from the influence of the larger and richer states, how will that organization, already amorphous, function at all? Mr. Chiao spoke for a brisk 25 minutes, and what he said was important. But he was preceded by five hours of welcoming speeches that broke through all efforts to contain the oratory. It was, doubtless, an omen of debates to come; it was a reflection of the painful truth that words are cheap, and they may be a poor, weak nation's only contribution to the conduct of world affairs. Perhaps the day will come when the People's Republic itself may be inclined to wonder how its 600 millions were voted down by a collection of mini-states.

Arms and Israel

Secretary Rogers's statement to U.S. News and World Report that recent Soviet arms shipments to Egypt have been "very moderate" and that the Mideast military balance "has not shifted" against Israel is good news as far as it goes. But that isn't very far. For the plain intent of Mr. Rogers's statement is not merely to warm the international air. It is to pressure Israel, by saying in effect there's no reason to heed its appeals for more Phantoms, to accept the interim settlement terms which the secretary laid out last month. Rather than accept these terms, Israel would like to negotiate a settlement with Egypt.

Does Israel need more Phantoms? Laymen without access to classified information cannot easily make a strictly military judgment, if there is such a thing. That three-fourths of the Senate and half the House have voted more sales tells more about Israel's political appeal than about its military needs.

In political-diplomatic terms, however, the question is much easier to assess. Jets are Israel's basic weapon and when it needs more, as it did last summer, two things invariably happen. In Egypt, hope takes command of diplomacy: the hope that if it sits tight, Washington will get back the whole Sinai for Egypt without its having to enter into the political arrangements by which Israel hopes to weave a stable peace. In Israel, fear takes command of diplomacy: the fear, fed by Israel's own experience, that its allies will let it down. The result is that both sides turn to look at Washington, not at each other. This is exactly what is happening now.

What is the answer to this dilemma? How can Washington make sure that Israel will not exploit its good will and sit indefinitely on captured territory without seriously trying to negotiate? The answer may lie in a different kind of military-supply relationship between the United States and Israel. The question of whether Washington will or won't supply arms should be entirely removed: Neither Israel nor Egypt should be allowed to think the relationship will be broken. Instead of major public Phantom deals, which understandably anger Cairo when they are made and falsely encourage Cairo when they are ended, there should be an open-ended pipeline. Instead of public American-Israeli haggling, there should be discreet discussion of implementing details. This would go far to take the issue of arms supply out of American-Egyptian and American-Israeli diplomacy, and out of American and Israeli politics as well. It could well mean that, at moments like this one, Israel might get fewer planes than it is publicly calling for. And it would let American efforts to expedite a regional settlement proceed without unseemly and risky delay. THE WASHINGTON POST.

UN Rebuke for the U.S.

A United Nations General Assembly committee has voted overwhelmingly to censure actions in the United States Congress that would violate the sanctions imposed by the Security Council against the white racist regime in Rhodesia. Only the dimension of the vote—93 to 2 with 12 abstentions—was a surprise. It was one of the most crushing defeats suffered by the United States in the 26-year history of the United Nations. William E. Schaefele, the American representative, told the committee this country would "continue to adhere to the broad, overall sanctions program." But this made scant impression on delegates who knew that Congress had, in effect, ordered President Nixon to permit resumption of chrome imports from Rhodesia in breach of the sanctions which the United States backed in 1968.

Hypocrisy undoubtedly figured in the vote. For example, Zambia, which voted to rebuke the United States, still imports coal and corn from Rhodesia. Yet the vote should help alert Americans to the magnitude of congressional folly in deliberately placing this country in violation of the UN Charter and of commitments solemnly undertaken. It is no comfort that the only governments voting against the reprimand were South Africa's white racist regime and Portugal, the only major colonial power left on the African continent. International Opinion

The Nuclear Path

Will Israel go nuclear? The possibility brings with it all the predictable but chilling risks of a parallel Arab nuclear comeback. Israel has been careful to keep the extent of its progress along the nuclear path secret. There are good military and security reasons for this. But in addition this secrecy is the basis of Israel's policy of "deterrence through uncertainty."

As long as the dimension and capacity of Israel's nuclear development remain unrevealed, the hope is that this uncertainty will induce the Arabs to be more restrained and cautious in their policies. The nuclear option remains the subject of serious consideration as long as a final settlement in the Middle East is not achieved.

Connally and the Dollar

Mr. Connally has just made it known, once more, that America does not intend to change the dollar parity relative to gold. There is thus no chance of a rapprochement between America and Europe in the near future, even more so since Franco-American relations are increasingly colder. If no solution is found before the end of the year (which is increasingly likely), Europeans can be expected to try to enforce measures specific to the Six while the Americans settle on the surcharge for an indefinite period. —From Combat (Paris).

Seventy-Five Years Ago

November 17, 1896
PARIS—Women's rights have found an apostle in the Dowager Duchess d'Uzes, who has already distinguished herself as a sculptress and playwright. In association with Mmes. Sarah Monod and Jeanne E. Schmahel, they will campaign chiefly for the right of a married woman to draw whatever money she has herself earned and to dispose of it as she wishes. Other injustices will be handled, one by one. Their agenda is quite long.

Fifty Years Ago

PARIS—Women in the majority have never been for war, except as the last resort for the defense of home and honor. The unanimity of the women of the world, expressed through many channels, in favor of the limitations of armaments and other measures for making war less probable is a sublime fact, known and accepted. It is but another example of the energy to be released if justice were granted to the milder sex.

Italian Democracy: Cracks in the Framework

By Marvine Howe

ROME—Cracks have appeared recently in the walls of the 17th-century Palazzo Montecitorio, which houses the Italian parliament, and some politicians feel that the erosion extends to the political system as well. A month before the national presidential election, the Italian political scene is racked by divisions that would shake any other country. Political scandals, party splits, a lacerating debate on the new divorce law and bitter labor troubles, all aggravated by a serious economic crisis, have accumulated to present a serious threat to the center-left governing coalition and perhaps to the democratic system itself.

The basic problem is that in 25 years of democratic government, Italy's great economic leap has not been accompanied by substantial progress in other sectors. Schools, transport, the public health system and public administration are widely denounced as inefficient and antiquated.

Successive governments have been unable either to enact urgently needed social reforms or to carry them out. Premier Emilio Colombo, who came to power 15 months ago, has succeeded in squeezing drastically watered-down bills on housing and tax reform through parliament, but other reforms have bogged down in the political labyrinth.

Experiment a Failure

Lello Basso, a former Socialist deputy and now candidate for a judgeship on the 15-man Constitutional Court, said in an interview: "The center-left experiment is a failure because of the profound contradictions in the ruling parties that make it impossible for a government to achieve the necessary reforms."

"People are tired," he continued. "They're tired of the inefficiency of the public administration, the scandals, the rise in living costs and the threat of unemployment. This is creating a new mood of opposition to the government and even to democratic institutions. To save Italian democracy, we need a coherent government, capable of courageous and forward-thinking action."

The governing coalition of Christian Democrats, Socialists and Social Democrats is deeply divided on most issues. Furthermore, the Christian Democratic party is split into at least nine factions. In the 953-man Chamber of Deputies the dominant Christian Democrats, with 406 seats, are often neutralized by the left-wing bloc led by the Communists and sometimes including the Socialists, for a total of 425 seats. Most Italians outside politics minimize the cracks in the political structure and believe that it will hold together somehow. "Some are 2,000 years old and still standing; a civil servant commented, discussing the current crisis, 'The good star will look after us.'"

Preparations for Vote

Nevertheless, preparations for the presidential election demonstrate the serious malaise in the governing coalition and the parties. The chief of state will be chosen by a 1,010-man electoral college, consisting of the members of the two houses of parliament and for the first time, representatives of the 20 newly established regional councils. A two-thirds majority is needed on the first three ballots and a simple majority thereafter. This year the election has assumed increased importance although, constitutionally, the presidency is a ceremonial post, the main executive powers being in the hands of the premier. Among some right-wingers a presidential system is favored, and an ambitious incumbent could play a much greater role.

Furthermore, a new president will be called on to name a premier to succeed Colombo, who will automatically present his government's resignation. The choice is particularly significant, for there is strong pressure from the right to oust the Socialists and form a center or center-right government.

A dozen or so undeclared candidates are competing in the presidential race, which is being run in party caucuses, the parlamentary corridors and the press. The leading candidates are two former Christian Democratic premiers: the shrewd, 62-year-old Senate president, Amintore Fanfani, who has taken an increasingly conservative line, and Foreign Minister Aldo Moro, 55, who leads a leftist group in the party. Since the feud between them threatens to wreck their party, it is possible that neither will win the nomination.

Other Contenders

Two other Christian Democrats in the front rank are also former premiers: Giovanni Leone, 63, a gifted man of compromise, and Mariano Rumor, 56, who could command broad support. Also under consideration are Giulio Andreotti, 52, Christian Democratic leader in the Chamber of Deputies, and a dark horse, Benigno Zaccagnini, 50, the party's president, who could win the support of the left.

The left-wing groups in parliament are holding talks to try to decide on a single candidate. Potential Socialist contenders—who are not given much chance—include the elder statesman Pietro Nenni, 80; the party chairman, Francesco di Martino, 64, and Alessandro Pertini, 75, speaker of the Chamber of Deputies. A possible but not likely compromise would be the re-election of Giuseppe Saragat, 78-year-old Socialist Democrat.

The selection will depend largely on horse-trading, in which alignments and commitments may be put aside for some kind of package deal to include a compromise on leading controversial issues. The Socialist leader in the chamber, Luigi Bertoldi, said bluntly that his party's decision whether to remain in the government depended on the position of the other parties on the presidential and divorce issues.

A Slow Way Out of the Swamp?

By C. L. Sulzberger

LONDON—The probability is that real peace negotiations and direct secret contacts between the United States and Communist sides in the Vietnam war will start some time this winter. Such is the clear intention he draws from President Nixon's outline of the American position last Friday.

What the President in effect told Hanoi and its Viet Cong allies was that the U.S. was rapidly drawing down to a minimum residual force in South Vietnam and was prepared to remove that remainder wholly if the Communists release American prisoners of war they now hold and also agree to a cease-fire pattern in all Indochina. It is probable one U.S. withdrawal as a combined Communist military offensive may first have to be repelled by Saigon.

Specifically omitted from Nixon's proposal was any offer to even contemplate a deal under which Washington would attempt to undermine the Thieu government. Hitherto the Communists have linked such a demand to U.S. withdrawal as a combined precondition for armistice terms.

U.S. Position

The American view is that we cannot impose a regime on the South Vietnamese. Before too long this argument may be publicly emphasized in the Paris negotiations by drawing a contrast between the way Saigon chose its government, imperfect as that may be, and the monolithic Hanoi system.

That particular phase of the Paris argument—for it is not yet a negotiation—is bound to further exacerbate the bargaining atmosphere while the U.S. military withdrawal program accelerates. Moreover, the Communists are not yet convinced that they cannot outlast American determination to stand by a minimal position.

They have confessed to recent visitors that an indicator on which they base their assumptions concerning "hard" or "soft" U.S. policy is the Dow Jones Wall Street index—a curious admission for Marxists. Certainly the index has been slipping badly, perhaps inspiring Hanoi to dig in its heels. Nevertheless, there is now evidence the North Vietnamese feel deceived by the Viet Cong's analysis of the situation in the South and are starting to reckon the Thieu regime may be stronger than suspected. This sentiment could lead to divisions in a hitherto united Communist front.

Peking Displeased

At the same time, there seems to be waning enthusiasm in Peking for Prince Norodom Sihanouk, the emigre former chief of government, in whose name Cambodian Communist guerrillas are fighting beside North Vietnamese troops. There never was much endorsement for Sihanouk in Hanoi.

The prince is a naturally ebullient man whose character finds the Chinese capital restrictive. When he sought French assistance to transfer his exile headquarters to Paris, this was discovered by the Peking authorities, who were displeased. The affair has not strengthened pro-Sihanouk partisans in Cambodia.

These straws in the wind may point toward a better chance of true diplomatic exchanges once the latest American setback is well underway—and presuming Saigon can beat back another offensive. It is felt that at some point during the intervening period extremely secret direct contacts with Hanoi will be initiated by Washington—in France or elsewhere.

No doubt this would please the French, hosts to the Paris talks, since they have long felt it was a mistake that Henry Kissinger did not see North Vietnam's Le Duc Tho, then in France, when Kissinger returned through Paris from his first Peking trip.

'Mini-Testing'

A bit more to add to your correspondence in connection with the "Cannikin Test."

What on earth is happening to our "men of science"? Are they indeed becoming the "Mad Scientists" of science-fiction? Is their judgment so infallible that we dare allow them to play around with the delicate balances of nature like a child with a box of matches or a chemistry set? I believe they have shown themselves to be, not incapable, but irresponsible.

There is very little cause for satisfaction or jubilation in the fact that the Alaskan test did no evident damage. (And what if they had been wrong even to this limited observation?) Perhaps we have yet to learn the full results of their blast in possible disturbances of the earth's crust, release of profound subterranean and ocean-floor forces, effect on world-wide climates etc., etc. We may be in for some surprises!

I wish to end on a constructive note. My observations are based on sound training in chemistry and chemical engineering. I believe that the clue is to be found in the great advances during this century in micro-technology, and particularly in micro-analysis in chemistry. An accurate analysis can be made with a sample the size of a pinhead. Nor does one have to build an experimental bridge or skyscraper to determine the design of their foundations. Laws of physics, mathematics, knowledge of strength of materials, etc., give all the information required.

I worked with the late Daniel E. Moran, of Moran & Proctor and the Foundations Company—in the basement laboratory of his Mondham, N.J. home—on studies for the design of the foundations of the George Washington Bridge over the Hudson. To know how to demolish such noble structures completely, one does not have to blow them up to determine the necessary explosive charges and their emplacement. I suggest very serious consideration of laboratory-size "mini" atomic testing under the most carefully controlled conditions. Such "micro-testing" can supply practically all the information required, and at a cost of a very small fraction of present-day testing.

Burning the Flag
It is so nice to know, thanks to a letter from a certain William J. Leahy, in today's (Nov. 9), IET, that four people, "including one American," have begun serving three months in Dublin. They were, according to Mr. Leahy, convicted of burning an American flag and of pouring oil blood on the steps of the American Embassy in Ireland.

Well! Pouring oil blood on the embassy steps is to be sure not at all nice—it was certainly a bit difficult to clean up. For burning an American flag in an anti-war demonstration, it is really sad that the American at least was not given a three-year sentence instead of a mere three months.

Mrs. Gandhi And Her Peace Policy

By Joseph Alsop

WASHINGTON.—Under the sheltering aegis of the Soviet Union, it appears that Indira Gandhi will probably lead India into war with Pakistan. Kicking a man when he is down is of course a moral duty, if your love of peace, your well-publicized spirituality and your practical personal interests all favor a swift boot to the groin.

This is the real essence of what is happening in the Indian subcontinent. As will be seen, it is of great strategic interest. But before examining the realities of the situation, it is first of all necessary to clear away the fungus-like growth of idealism that any Indian event inevitably generates in this country.

No doubt the Pakistanis have been very wicked and hard-hearted—in fact, downright unethical—not to wish to surrender one-half of their national territory to the insurgents of East Pakistan. One only wonders why the same Americans who now feel so strongly about this all managed to look the other way so happily when the Soviets decided that the wretched Czechoslovakia could be permitted the smallest measure of honorable freedom.

Rightly or wrongly, at any rate, the Pakistanis have refused, so far to surrender East Pakistan. The government of India, led by Mrs. Gandhi, has long been actively financing and arming the Bangla Desh insurgents.

Refugee Influx

Largely because the government of India has been doing everything to aid the insurgency, great numbers of refugees have been generated by the fighting in East Pakistan.

So the government of India—more specifically, Mrs. Gandhi in messages to President Nixon—now claims that the refugees themselves are a kind of casus belli. Logically and morally, it is an interesting claim. But what is more interesting is the resulting practical situation.

In areas, in numbers, in everything except fighting spirit, the Pakistani Army has always been inferior to the Indian Army. Furthermore the Pakistani Army is now divided. Nearly half is now fighting the insurgency in East Pakistan, with what is left defending the true Pakistani power-base in West Pakistan.

The resulting military opportunity for the Indians is quite simply to kick the Pakistanis when they are exposed. And it is here that the Soviets have entered the picture. In public in New Delhi, they have been preaching peace and restraint.

What the Soviets have said in private to Indira Gandhi, no one knows. They have had plenty of opportunity to whisper in that virtuous ear, since high-level Soviet missions have been continuously succeeding each other in New Delhi. Soviet arms have also been pouring into India on a very big scale. Finally, the Soviets have signed a treaty with Mrs. Gandhi that gives a crucial but tacit guarantee against the Chinese Communists.

Hate and Fear

The Indians hate the Pakistanis. They are desperately afraid of the Chinese, who are allied with the Pakistanis. A few years ago, the Indians would never have dared to attack the Pakistanis, for fear of prompt and devastating Chinese intervention. But that was before the huge Soviet military build-up on the Chinese frontier.

The Chinese, in turn, deeply fear that the Soviet frontier build-up may mean their own nuclear castration. Thus they cannot threaten the Soviets' new Indian clients, without giving the Kremlin the ideal pretext for an attack. So they have not moved a muscle or a battalion.

Mrs. Gandhi, meanwhile, has been dining out with leaders around the world, extolling her own love of peace. But the Indian deployments for an attack on Pakistan began before Mrs. Gandhi left India.

Indira Gandhi will have to pay a price to the Soviets, of course. On a miniature scale, one must expect the Soviets to gain, in India, a position somewhat comparable to what they have in Egypt. Above all, the Soviets will pretty surely get naval and air bases on the Indian Ocean.

Realistically, this may seem worth it to Mrs. Gandhi. The internal mess in India is ghastly. The country may be united behind her, if she kicks her neighbor successfully in the groin. As a Soviet client, in fact, she may have a better chance of survival than she would otherwise have. But let us not praise and pray about what she is up to.

Seeking and Finding the Andouille Sausage

Waverley Root

(IHT)—One of the most ancient and oldest sausages of France is the andouille. Nobody knows for sure when it was first made, but it dates from the 12th century, and it comes from the popular andouille, itself derived from classical Latin, inducere, to lead in, in this case, to lead sausage stuffing into its casing.

Waverley Root, the author of "The Food of Italy" and "The Food of France," is writing an encyclopedia of food, "Food: An Informal Dictionary," which will be published by Simon and Schuster.

Lighthearted andouille makers of Val d'Ajol, banded together in the Confraternité des Tastes-Andouille, from calling its members dépendeurs, and one of its officers the grand dépendeur. Another popular expression of the andouille has given to French its ficié comme une andouille (trussed up like a sausage), which describes anyone whose clothes are too tight.

different places; but if any one region of France preceded the others, it was probably Normandy.

Two of the claimants most famous for their tripe sausages, Vire and Caen, are in Normandy. From Normandy, the andouille may have fanned out into adjoining provinces, thus accounting for the assertions of such cities as Aire-sur-Lys, Armentières, Cambrai and Roye that they were the inventors of andouille. Brittany, which makes first-rate andouilles, but claims no credit for originating them, is also a neighbor of Normandy, and so is the Orléanais, where the cities of Jargeau and Vendôme are noted for this sausage.

is andouille de boeuf, andouille de gibier and andouille de volaille—of beef, game (especially wild boar) and poultry respectively.

Andouille de campagne is smaller in size, with pork added to the tripe, and is eaten either hot or cold. Andouille de Carême, like the andouille, is made of fish, a far cry from the real thing. Andouille en baudouche is stuffed into beef or horse intestines. Andouille truffée is, of course, andouille with truffles, which in my opinion add nothing to the sausage except higher cost.

The Swiss obsession with punctuality: It finally produced the Eterna Sonic

Advertisement for Eterna Sonic watch. Features an image of the watch and text describing its precision and electronic movement. "At Eterna we've been obsessed with punctuality for over 100 years. Finally, we decided that we should not merely concentrate our efforts on improving the conventional watch. So we turned to electronics. The electronic watch uses an incredibly accurate timing fork mechanism which you don't need to wind up. And which hums instead of ticks. Before we came along it was the most accurate wristwatch you could buy. But we went even further. We added what we call a "flexion oscillator," which makes sure the timing fork vibrates with exactly the same frequency, no matter its position on your wrist. Which makes it that much more accurate. Our Eterna Sonic will keep the same accurate time day in day out: less than 2 seconds variance a day."

Val d'Ajol holds an andouille festival on the third Monday of February; between festivals, you find the town bristling with signs proclaiming that in one shop or another andouille has been made for generations, according to recipes passed on from father to son.

Val d'Ajol holds an andouille festival on the third Monday of February; between festivals, you find the town bristling with signs proclaiming that in one shop or another andouille has been made for generations, according to recipes passed on from father to son. Val d'Ajol claims to be the place where the Rabelais first encountered the andouille, in 1548 or 1547, during a visit from nearby Metz, where he had taken refuge during one of the periods when he was in disfavour in France. In Val d'Ajol andouille the pork tripe is finely chopped, marinated in wine, paroled lightly, and seasoned with caraway before being stuffed into one or another of three dimensions of pork intestine, depending on whether the result is to be an andouille of normal size, the large gaudouau (or gaudouillet) or the giant douc-oulo. Val d'Ajol prefers to eat its andouille hot, with large broad beans. Guéméné-sur-Scorff, Brittany, is a small place which at first made only enough andouille for its own use, but visitors pressed it so highly that it soon came to be demanded throughout France. Guéméné sausage can be equalled nowhere else, the townsfolk say, because an essential element in its manufacture is the presence of the river Scorff, still happily free from pollution. The pork intestines from which the casings are made, after having been relieved of their fat, scraped and cleaned, are washed in the Scorff before being steeped in a pickling fluid whose formula is a local secret. When the casing has been stuffed with its tripe filling, the sausage is spitted, partly cooked over a wood fire and finally smoked slowly for 20 days for later consumption cold. If you want to taste the real thing, make careful inquiry about the exact origin of any Guéméné sausage offered you. The fame of the name has caused big food processors to put out a "Guéméné" sausage whose tang they imitate by unfortunate over-smoking. A word of warning: don't confuse andouille with andouillette. Andouillette is another story.

A 1972 'JEEP' IS SEVEN YEARS OLDER THAN A 1972 LAND-ROVER.

Advertisement for Jeep. Features a timeline showing the evolution of off-road vehicles from 1915 to 1972. "In 1941 we built the first of the modern off-road vehicles. Land-Rover came seven years later. Then came Toyota, Scout, and the rest. Right now, we have 31 years' experience building off-road vehicles. And it shows. Take our 1972 'Jeep' Wagoneer stationwagon. For smoothing rough rides, its got a more comfortable interior; for safety, a convenient instrument panel; for longer life and quieter operation, a new power steering, plus one of the biggest payload capacities of any off-road vehicle in its class, and great options like 'Trac-Lok' differential and a dual master cylinder. But all this doesn't mean the Wagoneer stationwagon has changed. It's been refined. With the kind of refinements that come after 31 years of experience. For safety, ruggedness, and durability, see your local dealer about our 'Jeep' Wagoneer stationwagon. No matter how great a 'Jeep' we build, we always find ways to make it better." Timeline: 1915 TOYOTA, 1941 'JEEP', 1948 SCOUT, 1948 LAND ROVER. "THE MODERN OFF-ROAD VEHICLE. WE MADE IT FIRST." "Jeep" is a registered trademark of Jeep Corporation. Jeep International Corporation, A SUBSIDIARY OF AMERICAN MOTORS CORPORATION.

Investment research: how much should it weigh?

Good investment research doesn't come by the pound. We don't think you should get the same format, or the same amount of fact and detail every time you ask for investment information. Investment research has to meet your needs. First, it must be based on a good investment idea, and be the result of in depth analysis. Next, it should be sensitive to the markets, as accurate and timely as possible, and as broad or as brief as you require.

THE DIMENSIONS OF INVESTMENT RESEARCH

Research information can range from a scholarly study to a quick synopsis of basic facts. Today you may want considerable detail on one company, tomorrow you may want a general picture of whole markets or industries. The next day you may want quick opinions on 20 different companies. You want this range of information, and you want it fast.

FIRST, CONSIDER YOUR NEEDS

At one extreme, a Merrill Lynch report can be a long document produced by one of the senior specialists in the world's largest securities research division. Merrill Lynch research operations are established in New York, Los Angeles, Toronto, Geneva and Tokyo. Research Division headquarters in New York alone employs about 300 people. The industry specialists travel thousands of miles each year to talk with companies' top management and to see their operations for themselves. The information they collect is, of course, invaluable to Merrill Lynch's portfolio analysts—and their reports are available to customers. Indeed, private meetings with these specialists can be arranged during their periodic travels—or when you are in New York.

At the other extreme, you might need a quick opinion on a stock or a selection of stocks. Merrill Lynch's opinion retrieval system is, as you would imagine, computerized. Your Merrill Lynch executive uses high-speed direct wire to consult a bank of opinions on about 2,500 stocks, mostly U.S. and Canadian, but including many European and Japanese securities. These are continuously up-dated by the securities research specialists.

The reply also comes by direct wire. It gives an opinion of whether to buy, sell or hold. Categorization of the stock as speculative, growth or income. An indication of dividend and past earnings, and often a brief comment on recent major developments in the company's business and an estimate of future earnings.

Some European institutions are using the system ('QRQ') for 20-30 opinions a day. It is obviously not a definitive research tool but they find it a great help in selecting situations worth further enquiry—in which case they can call on the whole range of Merrill Lynch's background report and studies.

"INVESTIGATE, THEN INVEST"

This has been the Merrill Lynch motto from the beginning, when the world of finance was rather slower and simpler than it is today.

Today, "investigation" means a gigantic investment, not only in obtaining information and opinions but the means to communicate them rapidly throughout the world. It must be a sign of Merrill Lynch's strength, as well as its size, that last year when a cloud of uncertainty hung over the stockmarket Merrill Lynch spent 6.9 million dollars on its world-wide research division. This sustained level of investigation means that your Merrill Lynch executive is better prepared to give you the information you need in the detail you ask for, rather than reports of identical scope and length.

Not all investment needs are the same.

12-Rounder in Astrodome

Selling Tickets to Ali's Bout with Mathis Is a Real Fight

Nov. 16 (NYT)—The voice follows a commercial. "Buster Muhammad Ali."

If I win this fight, I eat every day for the rest of my life. "Wishful thinking. He once weighed 275 pounds. He's about 260 now. He might be 260 by tomorrow's weigh-in."

be fights—defensively rather than aggressively. "Over in the restaurant at our motel," he said, "a girl told me, no matter what happens, don't get hurt. That really catches my heart. Not too many people say nice things like that. It really catches my heart."

voice announces that if Coca-Cola at your entitles you to a $20 ticket coupon on a $20 ticket 12-round heavyweight fight at the Astrodome here tonight. "It's the real draw here."

"I like to weigh 245, 240," he said. "235 is good weight. When I was 220, I had no energy. I knew what I wanted to do, but I couldn't do it. When I was 300, I could do it, but I was too tired to do it. If the fight was three rounds, I'd be the damndest three-round fighter in the world. But that's not the way it goes. It goes 15 or 12 or 10."

The Wine of Success "No prediction for Buster, no round, I'm too old for that. My weight's heavy, but my body's in better shape than before the Jimmy Ellis fight here four months ago. I'll be a surprising 220 at the weigh-in, you'll see. And if I get myself right, I'm ready for anybody. That's my trouble—not him—me getting in shape."

Gerry Knocks Out Bodell in 1 Minute of 1st Round

BRISTOL, England, Nov. 15 (UPI)—Gerry Quarry, Los Angeles, knocked out British champion Jack Bodell in the first round of a ten-round contest here tonight.

fourth in the rankings. He weighed 203 pounds, Bodell, ranked eighth, weighed 203-3/4. This was the Englishman's first fight since he won the European and British title from Joe Bugner. In his dressing room, Quarry, perching lightly, said: "The fight went exactly the way I had planned it; when he jabbed with his left, I moved in with my right."

"But I have a lecture called 'The Intention of Life.' The whole world is a storhouse of wine and war, only he who chooses the wine that he wishes. He who drinks the wine of success knows no failure. I've drunk the wine of success. I don't know no failure."

BOCKING—At Philadelphia, top-side-dwight contender Bennie Briscoe came back after taking two mandatory eight-centime in the first round to knock out Rafael Gutierrez at 1:15 minutes 17 seconds of the second round. Briscoe, from Philadelphia, knocked the Mexican fighter to his knees with left hooks to the head and body.

Make Believe HOUSTON, Nov. 16 (UPI)—Buster Mathis finished training today for his fight tomorrow night with Muhammad Ali and then met Ali in a sham battle outside the ring.

Mathis, in street clothes, posed for pictures with his son, Buster Jr., 18 months, in front of Ali, who was jumping the rope. Ali told Mathis to leave, saying he was interrupting his training.

World of European Soccer: Dec. 1 Crucial for Italians, English

WITH this column, Brian Glanville starts a weekly report on European soccer for the International Herald Tribune. Glanville has been chief football correspondent for the Sunday Times since 1958. He has covered the World Cups of 1958, 1962, 1966 and 1970.

Glanville wrote and helped to edit "Goal," the official film of the 1966 World Cup which won the British Film Academy award as best documentary of the year. He is also the author of 13 novels, including "The Rise of Gerry Logan," the story of a soccer player's life.

On Sundays the English writer may be found playing left-halfback for the Chelsea Casuals, a team which he helped to found.

By Brian Glanville LONDON, Nov. 16 (IHT).—For two very different managers, and two very different teams, Dec. 1 is going to be a very tense Wednesday. The managers are Sir Alf Ramsey, of England, and Gianni Invernizzi, of Internazionale, Milan. They are engaged, respectively, in Athens, where England must play a European Nations Cup qualifying match, and West Germany, where "Inter" meets Borussia Munchengladbach in the second leg of a European Cup tie.

For highly contentious reasons, Inter's match will not be played in Munchengladbach. It was there, on Oct. 20, that Inter was beaten, 4-1, after its center-forward, Roberto Boninsegna, had been laid low by a Coca-Cola can hurled by a German supporter. Inter, behind 3-1 at the time, was soon thrashed out of sight. It protested and succeeded in having the result annulled by the European Union's Disciplinary Committee. The game was ordered to be replayed on a neutral ground, and though Inter had demanded it be awarded the victory, both the team and Invernizzi were livid to breathe again, and although without a star midfielder player in Mario Corso, suspended from European competition until December, 1972, for kicking the referee, the Italians contrived to beat Borussia, 4-2, in Milan.

The coming game, originally ordered to be replayed in Bern, will now take place on German soil, and it is anybody's guess who will qualify. In the case of a tie on aggregate score, away goals count double, and Borussia, after all, has scored two of them. Nor can their brilliant, blond midfielder player, Gunter Netzer, play as badly again as he did in Milan, where Bedin marked him out of the game.

England, having limped through two slight games with Switzerland—a lucky victory in Basle, a surprising 1-1 draw at Wembley—will qualify for the quarter-finals of the Nations Cup if it wins, ties, or loses by anything less than 3-0 in Athens, on a grassless pitch where visiting teams find it awfully hard to play.

The vultures are hovering above the imperious head of Sir Alf Ramsey, who detests foreigners and journalists with equal zeal, and paid the penalty when the whole of Guadalupe turned noisily against the English team during the 1970 World Cup in Mexico. His predilection for the hard, energetic player playing artist over the ball, his cautious tactics in which wingers play no part, won England the 1968 World Cup but today his method seems staid and obsolete. Not that he is in any danger of leaving his job until he wants to. His predecessor, the far less effective Walter Winterbottom, kept his, through rain and shine, for 15 years.

Colts Face Dolphins Division Leads at Stake In 3 NFL Games Sunday

By William N. Wallace

NEW YORK, Nov. 16 (NYT).—First place will be at stake in three "money" games for pro football on Sunday, with a second place—not far from first—involved in a fourth. In Washington, the Dallas Cowboys, with two straight victories behind them and a new resolve, take on the Seattle Seahawks.

At Los Angeles, the 49ers play the Rams, to whom they have suffered last once and whom they hold a tenuous half-stake lead in the Western Division of the National Conference.

At Chicago, the Bears and Lions will square off. These two are breathing on puncheon Minnesota, the National Conference's Central Division leader, which is one game ahead of Chicago and 1 1/2 ahead of Detroit.

The Running Passer All these teams are strong candidates for six of the eight available playoff positions on the road to the Super Bowl riches. That is the menu, and some of the meals are likely to focus on an emerging trend, the running quarterback—like Roger Staubach of Dallas, Greg Landry of Detroit or Bobby Douglass of Chicago. All were prominent last Sunday as much for running the ball as for throwing it.

In the battle between defense and offense, the defenses are gaining. The scoring average is going down, from 42 points a game in 1969 to 38.5 last season and 37.6 so far this season. The reason is the efficiency of the 4-3 zone, the defense that coordinates the three line-backers (behind the four-man rush line) in a zone defense, rather than man-on-man, with the four backs against the pass. "You can't throw deep any more like you used to," that is the oft-heard lament from quarterbacks.

The 4-3 zone, however, has no defense against a running quarterback. But the counter argument from coaches is that running quarterbacks eventually get hurt, which ruins everything. Is this really so?

Scrambling It Up Fran Tarkenton, the original scrambler, has never missed a game in 11 seasons and he is the eighth-leading rusher of the active players in his conference with 2,996 yards gained in 501 carries. Staubach, told to lead the Cowboys to the playoffs two games ago, ran for 150 yards in two victories. Landry, with 344 rushing yards this season, ranks 13th in his conference. Douglass on Sunday rushed for 88 against the Redskins' fine defense. Bigger and more rugged than Tarkenton, these three run with purpose rather than scramble. Douglass, at 6 feet 4 inches and 230 pounds, runs with his coach, Jim Dooley, calls "organized scrambles." But, Dooley adds, he is not sure "which are organized and which are unorganized."

San Diego, Calif., Nov. 16 (AP).—Dennis Parter kicked a 45-yard field goal on the game's final play as the San Diego Chargers defeated the St. Louis Cardinals, 20-17, last night. The Cardinals had tied the game when Sid Edwards plunged one yard with 17 seconds left. San Diego then recovered the Cardinals' onside kick at the Chargers' 47. John Hadl then passed 16 yards over the middle to Gary Garrison to set up the field goal.

Two second-half touchdowns by San Diego's Jeff Queen had given the Chargers a 17-10 lead. But Charger running back Mike Montgomery scored on the first play after Bob Howard had intercepted a pass with 1 minute 45 seconds left to play. Cardinal linebacker Jamie Rivers recovered on San Diego's 33.

Jim Hart then passed 17 yards to Edwards and eight yards to MacArthur Lene, and Edwards cracked over three plays later. The Chargers totaled 208 yards in the first half but only scored on Parter's 35-yard field goal and trailed, 10-3. Former Charger defensive back Miller Farr stopped one drive with a fumble recovery and another with an interception for the Cards.

Tennis Prix Finds Sponsor LONDON, Nov. 16 (UPI).—The Commercial Union Assurance Co. today was named as the new sponsor for the International Lawn Tennis Federation's grand prix circuit for the next two seasons. In making the announcement, IITF general secretary Basil Raley said Commercial Union had guaranteed £2100,000 (£250,000 per year) towards prize money.

The Pepsi Cola Corp., which helped establish the grand prix circuit last year, announced last week it was stepping down as sponsor after having contributed $200,000 towards prize money this year.
